trio

flute, viola, harp c. 15'

written for Trio Farben

March 2025

Darius Paymai

Notes for performance

The piece often uses a mix of durations (in seconds), spatial notation, and traditional metered notation. Unless there is a clear rhythmic or otherwise stated correlation between two or more parts, the relationships between instruments can be loose and precise vertical alignment of parts is not necessary.

Audio playback

Audio is played back via one or more mobile phone speakers with tracks provided by the composer.

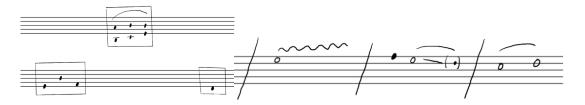

Specific techniques and notation

The oscillating line indicates a wide, slow vibrato. In the flute, this corresponds to a lip bend of no more than a quarter tone in either direction from the notated pitch.

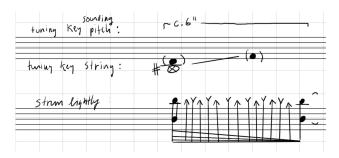

A thick horizontal line indicates the duration of a sound in non-metered contexts.

Both boxes and forward slashes indicate material which can be played in any order or combination, including (immediate) repetition of a cell. There is always a short pause before moving on to the next chosen cell.

On the final page, the harpist uses a metal tuning key to achieve a sliding tone on a specific string, notated as such:

A downward arrow on an accidental indicates flattening by no more than a quarter tone. A sixth tone (~33 cents) is the aim but not necessary. The flautist should find a suitably stable fingering.

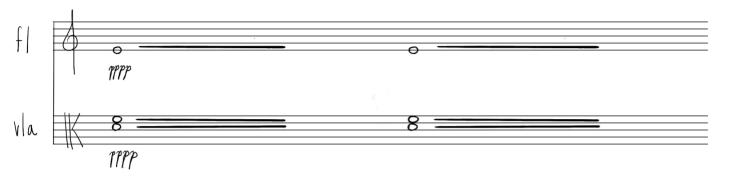

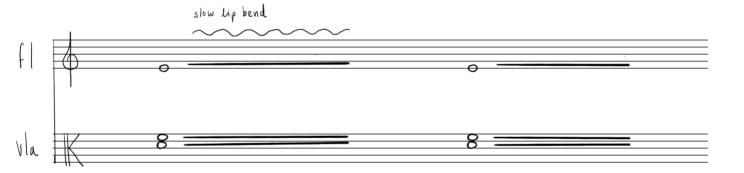

Programme note

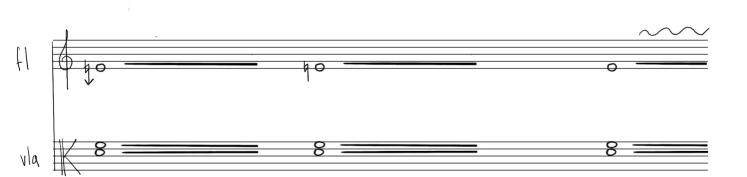

trio was developed with Trio Farben over the last few months and traces the history of this period through a kind of collage. I became interested in multiplicity and the layering of individual parts, and, after much time spent finding and collecting sounds, the process of completing the piece became one of the removal of material.

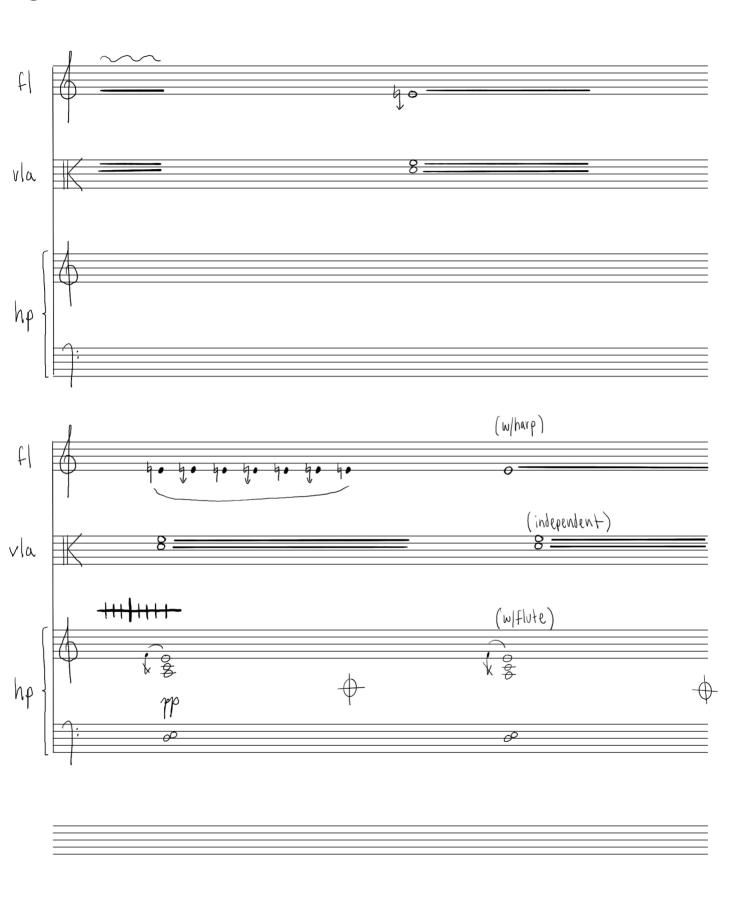

I am grateful to Imogen, Georgia, and Heather for asking me to write them this piece and for all their help along the way.
