Notes for performance

Trills

All trills are expressive, unhurried. Smoothest possible legato takes precedence.

Trills use the next scale tone above the written pitch (N.B. key signature!).

Acciaccature

Acciaccature should be played rather quickly, but strict adherence to the written rhythms is not entirely necessary.
The goal is more so to make the parts flow than to perfectly execute the material.

Arrows

A downward arrow above a note indicates the opportunity for a lipped-down detuning of less than a semitone from the written pitch. This can be done during the note itself (i.e. a small downward bend to the target detuned pitch) or the note can be played detuned from the start.

The piece is in two parts, melody and chords. Players will use stopwatches to coordinate when to move from melody to chords.

Melody

Players should begin at the arrow marked START, 5” after the stopwatches are turned on.

Players play through the given part independently, without any coordination whatsoever between parts. They should fluctuate their tempo within the given range and feel free to add short pauses at any point necessary or desired. The repeat signs are to be followed – if they reach end of the melody, they should start over from the beginning, again following the same repeats.

Oboe 1 plays melody throughout. Once the other three players have transitioned to chords, Oboe 1 should continue to play only from the area of the melody marked [X], with short pauses of indeterminate length (but no more than 8”) between repetitions.

Chords

Oboe 2 and bassoons 1 and 2, after their stopwatch cue, will transition one-by-one to chords. They should play in time with one another, taking care to start playing only at the beginning of a repetition.

After all three instruments are playing chords (after the first full repetition), they should then continue onward and repeat sections according to the given number of repetitions.
