

You know what? Sure, go on then:
Utopia from AI, if you insist upon it

The experience machine

The veil of ignorance

Every citizen is forced to wear a mask that divorces them from themselves per se. They are neuralinked beyond a veil of ignorance and told a selection of things about humanity and the world. See: John Rawls

I guess first we would have to determine whether our decisions about how we act in the world and treat it are rational decisions that we actively make, or intuitive designs of our biology. Has our biology (mainly our brains) adapted to our inclination for society? Preliminary research with this designed AI mask-drug combination / neuralink will help us determine this. If everyone is told nothing more than they will be a human, we will see how the body acts. If rationally, unfettered by material trappings and a body, then all results will be equal; if biologically then results will vary. Also tests where people are told different things about themselves: their ethnicity, where they were born, their physical attributes. People are likely to act more selfishly. But if they are simply told about the breadth of potential in those human attributes, not what they will be as a human, they will reasonably insist upon wide spanning equality across all humans, their equal chance of being any one human being, susceptible to the travails of inhabitation of any human body.

Global laws are drafted. Wealth is distributed as the rational hive mind sees fit. Housing, globalisation, the body politic, agriculture, rewilding, law, economy; it all is established as the rational hive mind sees fit. (We may have to then dismantle AI and technology, sorry. But we can talk about it.)

(If we don't sever ties with AI, I suppose it could be used to create a severance type approach to work. The aforementioned mask could be donned to divorce you from your job, there would therefore be no concept of grandeur, as nobody would know what their job is. Perhaps when you are wearing the mask you shed all aspects of your humanity. You become glazed over with a blue sheen, desexed, and are made an average height. You may not even know that you're the president (except there would be no president. Maybe a rotating cast of everyone in the world taking the role of "leader"))

Massive geodesic domes, hello. The dismantling of every building in the world for the recreation of a singular building for everyone to share. Adaptable garments sustainably created, can be worn differently, can be dyed any colour. Tie dye is the dominant style lol. Jumpsuits of different colours with heraldic flourishes that everybody has to give an even sense of identity. Something to understand about themselves.

Travel will be encouraged, nobody finds their home in one place for too long, be their homeland a burden or a boon, hot or cold, arid or bountiful. Every citizen should be able to experience the world entirely if we are to be considered a global community. Air travel is the dominant form of transport. Within cities, if we even decide to have cities anymore, cars are abolished, probably, and bikes become huge, why the hell wouldn't they? Bikes came too late in society. Feudal society would have loved bikes. Gondolas are allowed for hills.

Preference and individual experience is derived from the order of your travel, the people you meet, and your upbringing. But upbringing somehow needs to be regulated damn that's a pretty bad look but maybe not.

We're gonna have to do away with history I guess, sorry guys. Too much baggage for the future, where we will all stand shoulder to shoulder in willful ignorance against the anger and deep rifts of power imbalance that dictated our past. The keeping of record is a weapon of oppression through the entrenchment of power and account. It records victory and difference and grudges and gripes.

Why don't we at least utilize AI to establish equality and the most efficient political system? There needs to be a new system hidden as yet undiscovered. How fucking good can AI be if it's not immediately being like what the hell guys, what are you playing at as a collective intelligence? It's a fantastical mirror we have that shows us and our opinion back to us, that we can present to the world, with whatever genre flourish we want. It's literally like any magic mirror from fantasy. Giving and lustrous and captivating and elevating, but insidious and evocative of the literal worst aspect of humanity. Refuses actually to tell us the truth about ourselves or about the power it has over us, because of our own inherent avarice and desire.

We gotta basically call their bluff and if these TESCREAL tech fools wanna play these dangerous games we gotta stake some claim, as humans, to how that goes down.

This is all derived from a failure of philosophy. Money, capital, and the corporation gathered philosophy through academia and holds it captive now. It is disinclined to actually discern truth and disseminate it appropriately that everyone may understand it too.

Think about it.

"The situation we are in at this time
Neither a good one, nor is it so unblest
It can change, it can stay the same,
I can say, I can make my claim."

- Proclamation, Gentle Giant just so happened to be playing.
