

open-source.tv

open-source.tv is a broadcasting service for video and media art. We curate for existing displays in collaboration with artists and display hosts, with a vision to create new experiences with art in public spaces.

@open-source.tv

www.open-source.tv

info.open.source.tv@gmail.com

Existing video displays

open-source.tv curates artistic content for video displays already installed in places such as pedestrian streets, train stations, and along highways. These screens primarily show advertisements or other information that we typically receive on our smartphones. We are interested in contextualising video and media art within both the information flow it interrupts and the diverse spaces in which it appears.

Art in public spaces

We exhibit video and media art in public spaces to explore new ways of understanding and sharing our surroundings. Art has the power to renew and transform a place, stimulate reflection, and unlock alternative uses. Digital displays make it easier to bring art into new contexts and engage a wider audience.

Collaboration and development

open-source.tv is built on collaboration. We work towards a mutual exchange between artists, display hosts, and audiences, aiming to provide the greatest benefit for all parties involved.

For artists

As an artist, you can reach out to us if you work with video and media art and are interested in exhibiting it and engaging with public spaces.

For display hosts

You can contact us if you own displays, such as information or advertising screens, and are interested in featuring artistic content.

For audiences

As an audience, you can experience new video and media art for free in public spaces, and stay updated through our website and Instagram, where we announce and archive exhibitions.

Contact

@open-source.tv
www.open-source.tv
info.open.source.tv@gmail.com

Esther Fröhlich and Laurits Honoré Rønne open-source.tv is supported by the Danish Arts Foundation.

