JULIAN LOMBARDI (b. 1996, Philadelphia, PA)

Julian Lombardi

My paintings stage events rather than scenes. They grow out of living inside a global carnival where everyday life feels close to overload – psychic, digital and ecological at once. In each work, bodies, landscapes and symbols collide and mutate, holding the split second where things feel sacred and toxic, intimate and planetary at the same time.

Visually, the paintings sit between biomorphic abstraction and haunted landscape. Protean forms, fragments of architecture and traces of the figure drift through saturated colour and dense mark-making, like microscopic scans of a nervous system under pressure. These environments echo cities, screens and dream-states; they are spaces where the human and non-human blur, and where it is hard to tell whether a system is breaking down or reorganising itself.

The works grow from drawing, reading and research, but the act of painting is fast, physical and intuitive. I overwrite surfaces so they behave like palimpsests: layers of time, memory and information pressed into a single image. For me, painting is a way to construct an image within the failure of images – to test what kind of image can still hold weight now, when we are saturated with images that fail us in real time.

I use abstraction to think through globalisation, surveillance, conspiratorial thinking, spiritual hunger and the digitisation of feeling – conditions that bring us closer together and further apart. Each canvas is a kind of reality stake: an exposed nerve in paint that registers the difficulty of being a person at accelerating speeds, while insisting that something honest and even sacred still persists inside the distortion.

Julian Lombardi is an American artist living and working in London. Lombardi's position on biomorphic abstraction points to the genre's capacity for redemption, agency and psychosocial awareness. Lombardi leans into his sub- and unconscious to create distinct protean forms that commingle with the uncanny land- and dreamscapes. Lombardi's inquest into surrealism allows for sensuous color and rapturous painterliness to reveal our nuanced relationships to the complicated present.

While Lombardi's practice draws from his deep understanding to painting's histories, his signature vocabulary offers abstraction in the present tense where beholders are offered an opportunity to think through the complexities of contemporary life.
