Approaches to regeneration

In collaboration with: Stef Lernout, Felix Waldner and Studio 'Adaptive Re-use' Professors: Nicolas Petilion, Jan Degeeter from University of Antwerp.

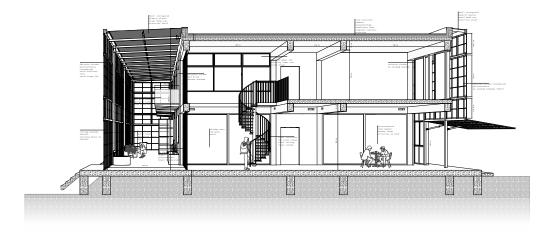

Approaches To Regeneration is a book written by Stef Lernout, Felix Waldner and Michiel Van der Veken. We searched for the meaning of adaptive re-use and tried to write a manifest on how to approach the transformation of empty buildings to new functions.

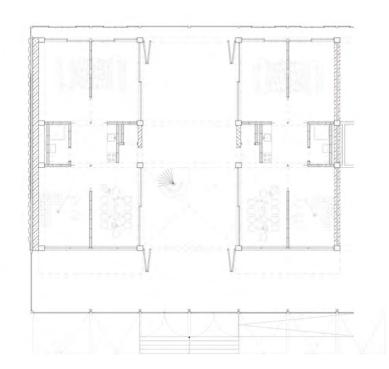

The book is written in three chapters: the natural environment, the build environment and the human soul. I was in charge of the build environment part. The renders on this part is a case study to fine tune our book. The book also contains interviews I took with architects like Bart Hollanders, Sven Verbruggen, Felix Verheyden, Sofie de Caigny and Hugo Chan.

Manifesto

Humanity has entered a time where it's already too late to make choices. The question of whether we destroy or rescue what is left can no longer be discussed. Tabula rasa concepts from the previous century need to make place for a Tabula scripta approach. The wast amount of existing structures with potential for adaptive re-use can no longer be ignored. A recognition of the power thesis structures hold is required to create a shift in mindset and approach. Our earths material sources are also getting exhausted. By embracing a philosophy of minimal intervention and strategic repurposing, we can mitigate the reduction of new resources while maximising the utility of existing structures. New architects are searching for ways to approach the complex world of re-use. This while a boxing match between young architects and building promoters plays a major role in the continuation of destruction. It is our responsibility to show the potential of architecture and the way as thefecture communicates with nature and humans.

L'art et L'architecture

CE QUI A DÉJÀ

This exposition took place in The Claywood Factory, an art gallery in the province of Luxembourg. Gouvy, a village in the Belgian Ardennes has a rich inventory of buildings. Some of them are in need of renovation in order to preserve the identity of the village and it's inhabitants. For this reason I made this exposition to remind the inhabitants of their "patrimoine". The exhibition was a visual show with photography, videography and 3D animation to showcase on a peoples level the beauty of architecture.

Fournil

Fournil is a project that builds upon the Portes et Fenêtres exhibition. Its long-term goal is to repurpose an old bakery house in Gouvy. The building is currently undergoing restoration, with completion expected by the end of 2025.

Monolith

Design for cocktailbar 'Ox und Klee Bar' design in one Michelin star restaurant (Cologne, Germany)

Yakisugi

Yakisugi was born from my fascination with charred wood. Inspired by Japanese design, I created both the chair and the accompanying coffee table using locally sourced wood. Designed and handcrafted by me, these pieces were proudly exhibited at the Biennale of Gouvy.

Bataviastraat is project consisting of four apartments around 120m² each. For this project I designed the layout of the apartments, electrics and the lighting. In collaboration with Plaza an Antwerp real estate agent / developer.

Mr Generic

Master studio by Sven Verbruggen

Mr. Generic was a master studio centered on the work of James Stirling, aiming to translate his architectural insights and principles into the design of a new building. The project was developed in alignment with the guidance provided by At Work, a book by Neutelings Riedijk Architects.
