BIO

Finnish Obi Blanche and Serbian Kristina Tica launched a music collaboration under the concept of #postdigitalpunk due to their common interest in self-built instruments, minimal beats, and catchy melodies. They formed Obi Blanche & B.O.B [Beaches of Belgrade] as a collaborative projects joined by other musicians for live performances of their music.

Obi Blanche: Experimental electronics, guitars, and broken vocals from Finland. Dirty transistor-distorted electronic beats and squealing no-wave guitar destruction are mixed in his take on melodic popular music. Building his DIY guitar (known as 'RAKE'), with the guidance of Dutch inventor Yuri Landman, has been the culmination of the research towards his sound: perfectly imperfect and raw. Guitarist at Thomas Azier (Hylas Records), formerly Anika (Stones Throw), and Norman Palm (City Slang).

Kristina Tica [Tiz-za]: playing a self-built bass called 'BRAKE' by Obi Blanche. She comes from the Belgrade underground and brings minimal, but heavy on the low-end bass lines mixed with her baritone voice. Her years of knowledge of a variety of music influences her playing, check her playlists and [\[ticakristina.com\]](https://ticakristina.com).

Muri Anda [saxophone, vocals, electronics] / antifascist-impro-noise-jazz-punk / is a Linz-based artist, noise maker and bird nerd Muri Anda moves freely through underground ecologies of sound, conceptual work and improvised performance. Her work is grounded in dynamics and momentum, in the interaction between the organic and synthetic, in deconstruction and re-creation — a sonic cycle of chaos, order, and chaos again. Her performances are a visceral blend where free improvisation meets punk, meets obnoxious noise, always searching for new forms to emerge from the remains.

Ocasionally, Reinhard Zach joins us with an acoustic travel jazz drumkit, an electronic drum pad, and a monophonic synth.
