Your group name: Christ Unveils Mysteries (Austin + Chopra)

During the project's first week, when the teams were being created, Austin and I immediately knew we wanted to be a group. We decided on "Made In X" as our project after coming up with ideas for what we could do for each project. That first week went without any troubles. Working in a group of 2 didn't really change much, since we were just brainstorming for clear ideas at the time.

When the second week began I immediately began writing the lore. Though, I did have to stop and shift gears for a bit when we were told about trello. I learned how to use trello, made some due dates and goals, and then it was back to writing. I spent create times at school and extra time at home to try and make it the best it could be. It wasn't a matter of not working on it during class, but wanting it to a level of quality that I was satisfied with, and I had fun working on it. Doing things from home is a lot easier, because it gives me a nice feeling of privacy that I like to have, even though I don't have anything weird on my screen. During that time, I realized that having 6 arcs would be unreasonable for what was supposed to turn into a 10 minute video, so I decided to compress a lot into the epilogue. Over the weekend before week 3, I had completed it.

Week 3 was a good week for me. Based on the lore, I created a video script that was much shorter. It ended up done before Wednesday, the halfway point of the school week. After that, I recorded some voice lines and began the process piece. Even over the weekend I was hard at work, creating some peanut graphics to help lower Austin's workload, even if just by a little bit.

We were nearing the end, as we entered week 4. Austin brought his high quality mic, and we recorded some better versions of the voice lines. I finished the process piece, which was a great way to reflect on the project as a whole. Working in a group with Austin is great. He is very productive and great at taking on a fair workload or even a bit more than the others. A group of 2 is nice because it's really easy to split the work and there's never someone left out, but also the workload can be a lot larger. If there was one thing I could've done differently, I would have tried to find extra time to help with what Austin was doing. After everything for me was finished, Austin still had to do lots of editing for the final video. If I had asked him what he needed help with, I could've helped him, like when he needed a few more peanut graphics for the final video. I'll try to be a bit more involved in my teammate's work in the next group project when I feel good about mine. There wasn't much that I learned to help me with things like taking a test, but I feel like I learned a lot about working better as a team.
