Nonsensically Trashy: The Series

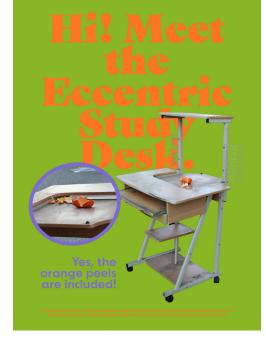

A show dedicated to the busy, stressed, and perhaps the confused.

Chair was located across from a deserted supermarket but right in front of a crowded supermarket, next to an oak tree. Object was discovered in a bustling neighborhood of Asian aunties...

This hotter than a Vespa vehicle was leaning against a closed pharmaceutical store front. The store front was covered with blue and white graffiti. Approach with caution.

The attractive mess was not in an attractive place but was snuggly resting in front of a couples' date spot. Best approached with an offering such a beverage cup of sorts.

The SI*ttiest Chair is definitely not up for any sort of commitment but paying them a sit (with consent) is allowed. You will have to make an official appointment as they are quite popular but feel free to find them on the street at the corner of a park and shopping plaza.

Designer's Note

Not much to be said. Those who understand will understand and those that take it too seriously will never. If all objects and furniture had a one-liner to all their long-term hosts they might've been abandoned a lot sooner for this exhibition depending on their hosts' morals or types.

The Calmer Collectives Gallery are only hosting these objects for a short duration of time and at the closing of the show, all objects will be auctioned off at a partner auction house. Time, date, and location will be announced spontaneously towards the last week of the show.

Congrats to all that got to pause and take a glance at any of the objects or posters while getting a decent chuckle out of them, you might've won at life. To all those that sat in complete confusion after your encounter, you've proved the purpose of this show and have wasted your time contemplating the deeper meaning for trash (unfortunately).

Insincerely,
Vivian & The Calmer Collectives Gallery
